HeartSuite Server Edition, Version 1.0

Oct. 15, 2023

Representations

- HeartSuite comprises a set of system functions and user application programs. The purposes of HeartSuite is multifold; it is designed to stop programs from being started without the knowledge and consent of the user, as well as to stop the ones that are executed from accessing files and remote servers without the knowledge and consent of the user. HeartSuite does not discriminate between programs nor considers user privileges, including root access; hence, it is capable of preventing necessary and useful startup programs from being executed as well as shutdown programs. Accordingly, HeartSuite must be configured to permit the appropriate execution of such programs so that legitimate operations of the operating system are not hampered.
- The HeartSuite lockdown feature prevents attackers from changing the HeartSuite configuration during operation. Some maintenance of the computer, however, will require that this feature be disabled temporarily; therefore, it is incumbent on you to put into place other protections for your computer so that attackers cannot successfully attack your server during maintenance. Recommendations for such alternate protections are included in the HeartSuite documentation.
- The details of how to configure and use HeartSuite are contained in the document entitled, "HeartSuite Setup and Configuration."
